The suburban Chicagoland residents along the path of the Great Lakes Basin project have clearly shown their opposition to this project, it is not in the public interest. This project, however, still has not been denied and now there are some towns seeking to have the project altered so that it will run through them. This shows a serious flaw in the project, GLBT assumes, and it seems incorrectly, that towns do not want increased train traffic. Clearly some do as evidenced by Streator, Illinois asking for the line to run through them. This submission by them clearly indicates yet again that GLBT has not done their due diligence and researched what the public wants. Given this information the entire project must be denied and sent back to be completely re-worked, as clearly there are towns that feel the project would be in their interests. Please issue an immediate no build ruling on the current project as the project should be built in an area that wants it, and clearly the area it is proposed to be in does not want it.
