Mr. Navecky:

Thank you for your prompt reply. I think it is so important to decrease the pressure on highways, as costly and inconvenient repairs as well as the dangers of heavy truck traffic make it expensive and difficult for people to drive on the interstates. If safety measures are in place, I think train lines are extremely important and should be increased whenever possible.

Personally, I have significantly decreased the trips I have taken into Chicago and to Wisconsin in the past five years due to construction and heavy truck traffic, and I have often thought of how these issues could be relieved if more trains were in use.

Thank you,
Jill Grove

Ms. Grove -

Regarding goods that could move on the proposed rail line, the only information that Great Lakes Basin Transportation, Inc. (GLBT) has provided my agency to date, is that the line could see unit commodity trains (such as coal trains), mixed carload trains, and intermodal trains. This information comes from material that was provided to us on October 15, 2015, which you can find here:

[see Attachment, page 2, last paragraph in link above]

As my agency gets into the environmental review process, we will be requesting additional information on this topic from GLBT.

Thanks,

Dave

Hello:

I am just curious what types of things would be transported on these rail lines if they are built. Thank you for any information you can provide.
