I am against this sale. There are only 2 places to cross that do not involve actually going over the grade. Now, a stopped train causes traffic backups all over the area. More trains would just contribute to the congestion. Plus, the fire station that serves my house is on the other side of the tracks. More trains would increase response time. Lastly, the noise from the trains & the train whistles that would be necessary would be a nightmare.

Who is going to pay for all of the upgrades? The cities already are strapped paying for services -- plus I see no benefits to the cities.
